BOND BOOSTERS HOLD ROUSING MEET IN SCHOOL

Great Enthusiasm Displayed
In Gathering Last Night
At Woodrow Wilson

The most enthusiastic meeting yet held by those favoring passage of the bond issue for construction of three new elementary schools for the Jefferson School District was held last night at the Woodrow Wilson School, presided over by the president of the board, G. R. Augustien.

A report was received from the committee to arrange for a mass meeting at Colombo Hall in Colma. This meeting will be held next Wednesday evening, September 19. All persons interested in the welfare of our school children are urged to attend and hear the reasons why we need new schools in this district.

There will be good speakers to explain all phases of the proposition to issue bonds for the construction of the new buildings.

It was explained that all work on the new buildings will be done by persons who are residents of the district. Only when it is impossible to fill any job with such a person on account of the fact that no one of that particular craft resides here will it be permissible to employ outside help. This rule will be strictly adhered to, as the desire is to furnish employment to as many of our home people as possible in the construction.

Representatives were present from the Druids Order and voiced themselves as in favor of the project.

Arrangements were made to have cuts made showing the proposed new school buildings as they will appear, and the same will be printed in the papers. The entire series of three appears on this page of The Record. It was stated that there would be no interference with the school classes at any of the three schools

ALL IN READINESS FOR MERCHANTS' GALA DAY PICNIC

The committee has been working overtime this week getting ready for what will probably be the greatest picnic in the history of this organization and the Merchants' Association has certainly put on some good ones.

The annual picnic of the Daly City Merchants' Association is looked forward to each year by almost the entire population of Daly City as one day in the year when the cares and worries of the world can be forgotten and pleasure and enjoyment indulged in to the limit.

The committee expects the largest crowd ever this year, and has prepared unusual attractions. There will be all kinds of good things to eat and drink—some of it free and some not—but there will be all the taglarini you can eat, all the coffee you can drink, and beer, wine and other beverages for the thirsty.

Races and games will be on the program and prizes a-plenty for the winners.

The now celebrated Eagles' Band will be on the grounds and will give two concerts under the spreading oaks, while a separate orchestra will furnish music for the dancers.

Those who are going to attend should make no other plans for the day, and should be at the City Hall at 9 o'clock Sunday morning to get in line for the parade, which will be escorted by the police and led by the city officials and officers and members of the Merchants' Association.

All the city and county officials have been invited and probably will attend. The city officials of San Francisco and members of civic organizations have also been invited.

The place, Oak Cove Park, near San Mateo, on the Half Moon Bay road.

The time, next Sunday. All will be welcome. All will have a good time. All will be better for it. Don't miss it!

SUPERVISION OF GRAMMAR KIDS' PLAY IS SUCCESS

Many Children Enjoy Their Saturday Holiday On Recreation Ground

Well, they like it! AND HOW!

Supervised recreation on the elementary school grounds of the Jefferson School District has at last become a reality.

Last Saturday the enthusiasm of the children spoke louder than words of their appreciation of being taught to play in group harmony.

The mothers of the children who attended this session were loud in their praise. They feel that their children will now have somewhere to play on Saturdays where they will not be exposed to the dangers of the streets with their traffic hazards.

When the movement for supervised play was first advocated at the meetings of the General Pershing P. T. A., through the members of that unit, the work was immediately endorsed by the other P. T. A. Units of the district and by the Woman's Civic Club. Encouragement was received in the promotion of the work by the members of the city council and the board of trustees of the school district, as well as from many citizens in private life who were interested in the welfare of our children.

The work was enthusiastically carried forward through many meetings between representatives of these various organizations until its culmination by provision by the council for the pay of the supervising teachers and the grant of use of the grounds by the board of school trustees, and the able assistance rendered by our superintendent of instruction for the elementary schools.

Now that the thing is actually a going project, let's give all those assisting in this worthy work a hearty "Thank You!"

CITY FATHERS IN REGULAR SESSION

Monday being a legal holiday, the City Council met Tuesday evening in regular session at the City Hall, with Mayor Smith in the chair and all councilmen present.

The principal business transacted was the passage of a resolution fixing and levying the tax rate for the fiscal year 1934-35. Other routine business was disposed of.

It is noted that there has been an increase in the tax rate over last year. This was necessitated to provide for a sinking fund for the redemption of bonds of 1934 for improvement to the water works at that time to provide sufficient facilities for furnishing water to the residents of the Crocker Tract. It was found at that time that the old water system purchased by the city previously was not sufficient to give adequate service to the residents of that section of Daly City.

Owing to the fact that the taxpayers had recently been assessed for street improvement work it was deemed advisable that only interest on these bonds be paid until 1934, and that then provision should be made for retirement of $3000 in these bonds each year thereafter.

This has now been provided for by the council.

JEFFERSON UNION HIGH SCHOOL P. T. A.

(By F. M. B.)

Jefferson Union High P. T. A. will hold its regular monthly meeting, next Tuesday evening, September 18, at 8 o'clock in the Little Theater of the Jefferson Union High School.

The theme of the evening's program will be "Citizenship." The speaker will be Merritt Brady, Americanization chairman of the Eighth District, American Legion.

Invitations have been sent through the new students to their parents, for whom this meeting has been planned. We hope to see many fathers and mothers there to enjoy the program and also the social hour which will follow.

LEGISLATURE IN SPECIAL SESSION AT STATE HOUSE

Several Measures of Utmost Importance Considered
By Solons in Meeting

Members of the California State Legislature are meeting in Sacramento in extraordinary session to consider measures of vital moment to the citizens of the state.

Federal relief authorities intervened to interrupt passage of Governor Merriam's $24,000,000 unemployment bond issue program carrying a provision for state assumption of financial control over California funds.

A letter from Vernon D. Northrup, State Emergency Relief Administrator and federal representative, warned the governor and the Assembly that the national government could not accept the program in the form it passed the Senate by a vote of 28 to 0.

The two houses joined in passage of a resolution memorializing Congress to provide old age pensions on a liberal basis.

The Assembly passed, without a dissenting vote, a "ten pay plan" for delinquent installments on assessments in California irrigation districts. This act requires the property owner to keep up current assessments.

Still confronting the special session was a mortgage foreclosure moratorium, ranked with administration of relief funds as a controversy-charged issue.

FEDERAL FUNDS READY FOR AMPLE WATERSUPPLY

By J. W. MARCHBANK
(Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work)

Recognizing the importance of the mining industry, plans are being worked out by federal government agencies for assistance in furnishing water to properties in El Dorado County, the "cradle" of gold in this state. The law provides for help in such enterprises if the directing concern is publicly owned.

Under the plans outlined, the ditches and distribution system of the Diamond Ridge Ditch Company will be taken over by the new company, to be owned by the public. The system comprises about forty miles of distributing ditches, as well as small reservoirs and storage sites.

It is pointed out by the El Dorado County Chamber of Commerce, which is seeking to get the financial aid from the government, that development of more water is vital if the operations in the western end of the county, served by the system, are to be permitted to continue.

Latest reports are to the effect that prospecting and development work are under way on three large properties that need water immediately. With plenty of water, it is said production on a large scale will be possible.

Acting Governor Frank F. Merriam will be asked by the Chamber of Commerce to give his consent to transfer of the Ditch Company's system to public ownership, and also will be requested to poll the members of the Legislature in order to obtain, if possible, the consent of 51 per cent to the transfer.

Commenting on the future of the industry in California, following a brief visit here, Sidney Norman, in the Vancouver Sun, has this to say: "California is returning to her first love, the industry that made her great. For many years, through idiotic blue sky laws, the state of '49 made criminals of all mining promoters but those of large wealth, even before they got started. Real estate was the one sacred industry. Subdivisions were laid out over a veritable empire, until Los Angeles

DALY CITY GIRLS WIN STATE FAIR DRILL CONTEST

El Carmelo Parlor No. 181, N. D. G. W., was well represented in the Admission Day parade held in Sacramento on September 10. Four decorated machines carrying members of the parlor led the El Carmelo Parlor Native Sons drum corps, followed by the Native Daughters snappy drill team in red and white.

MUCH ACTIVITY BY AUXILIARY OF AMERICAN LEGION

Orphans Assisted in Search
For Education to Meet
Problems of Life

By G. J. H.

The American Legion Auxiliary has scheduled among its many activities the education of the children left here by the many veterans who gave their lives for their country.

Although the organization cannot assume the full responsibility of educating all these children, definite steps have been taken to aid many who are trying to prepare to meet the problems of life. Last year 136 world war orphans were assisted by our Educational Revolving Fund.

The state of California is co-operating with the American Legion Auxiliary in this great cause. We are seeking to enlarge this work, so that, as time goes on, many more may have these opportunities for education.

Next week is Constitution Week, and the American Legion and its Auxiliary are urging a closer study of the principles contained in this great document. The Constitution is the very core of our government and we feel that if the American people had a little clearer understanding of it there would be more peace, harmony, loyalty and prosperity in this country of ours.

The American Legion Auxiliary is joining with the American Legion in sponsoring the observance of Constitution Day, September 17.

Following the regular meeting last Wednesday evening, the members of Daly City Unit No. 410, American Legion Auxiliary, accompanied District President Catherine Foreman to South San Francisco, where officers of Bernard McCaffrey Unit No. 355 were installed. Members of the San Mateo County Council drill team put on the work.

On Friday evening a large delegation attended the installation ceremonies of Greater Mission Unit No. 347 in the Veterans' Building in San Francisco. Among the distinguished guests present was the Department President, Mrs. Carrie T. Baade. Mrs. Baade gave a very inspirational talk on Americanism over the radio during the evening. She also spoke again to the assemblage on her plans for carrying out the work of the American Legion Auxiliary.

This evening, Friday, September 14, the San Mateo County Council of the American Legion Auxiliary will meet in Daly City Legion Hall. The annual election of officers will be held.

On Thursday evening, September 20, Daly City Unit will hold its installation of officers for the coming year. District President Catherine Foreman will be the installing officer and District Vice President Ethel Pontius will be the sergeant at arms. Members of the San Mateo Council drill team will assist.

Members of Daly City Unit belonging to the San Mateo County Council drill team attended the San Bruno Veteran Firemen's celebration, last Sunday, and marched in the parade. County Council President Mrs. Florence Chess carried the banner.

PARENT TEACHERS OF COLMA MEET

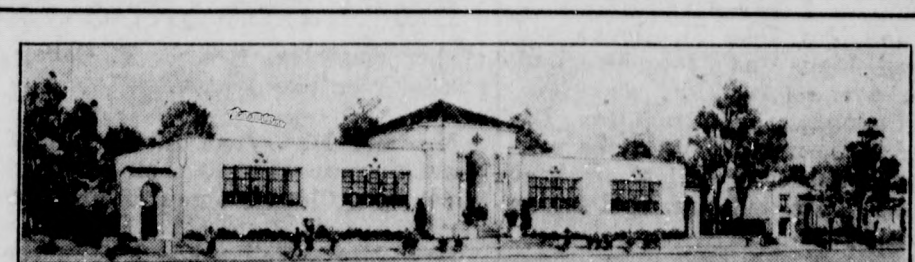

At the meeting of the Colma Unit of Parent Teachers the president, Mrs. A. Hollingsworth, announced her chairmen for the year, as follows:

Publicity, Mrs. H. Remington; Historian and Hospitality, Mrs. C. Benedetti; Membership, Marie Trainor; Program, Hazel Madonna; Recreation, Dorothy Garibaldi; Emblem, Kate Seramaglia.

A delightful musical program was given at this meeting, with songs by Alma Armarino and Dorothy Camenzind, and selections by Kevin Exedindo and Thomas Stangalini.

Mrs. R. Spann of Burlingame delivered a fine talk on "Friendship," after which she was presented with a potted plant. This she accepted in a very happy spirit.

After the business meeting, refreshments were served.

Gertzenberg held the opposing batsmen to eight scattered hits and fanned ten.

Varni, Johnson and Peiffer were the leading hitters of the contest, each collecting two hits.

Joe DiMaggio's younger brother played a sensational game at shortstop for the Telegraph Hill boys.

WOMAN HURT BY RECKLESS DRIVER

Miss Connie Colbert, 22, of 16 Risel street was struck by a machine driven by Frank Roberts, 21, Tehama street, San Francisco, last Saturday night at the corner of Irvington street and Evergreen avenue.

Miss Colbert was removed to the Villa Sanitarium, suffering from shock, bruises and internal injuries.

Roberts was arrested and is being held in the Daly City jail on a charge of driving recklessly and not having a driver's license.

He was using the car without permission of the owner. Young Roberts was arraigned before Judge Ellis C. Johnson at 10:30 o'clock Tuesday morning of this week and was sentenced to serve sixty days in the county jail.

A complaint was filed on Wednesday by A. F. Felsch of Evergreen avenue, owner of the truck, against Roberts for using the car without the permission of the owner.

REGULAR MEETING OF PERSHING P. T. A.

The General Pershing P.T.A. held their regular monthly meeting in the school meeting room with Mrs. L. Gimovsky presiding over a large attendance. The business of the month was attended to with a five minutes period devoted to the School Bond issue to be voted on October 5. This P.T.A. as a unit is for the bond.

Another important issue of the meeting was the membership drive that is to be held this month, with the promise of a party to the children of the room who brings in the most new members to the P.T.A.

A very thorough report was given on Supervised Play by our recreation chairman and we are thankful that so favorable a report can be given.

After the adjournment of the meeting all the members were invited to coffee and home made cake as arranged by Mrs. Anne Eason, reciprocity chairman.

Miss Corine Cyr of Seattle has been the house guest during the past week of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Statton of Evergreen avenue.

Mrs. Marie Gaillard and daughter Jean Marie of Oakland were house guests during the past week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Sehr of Citrus avenue.

HONEY FAVORED AS SWEETENING

Adds a Delicate Flavor to Various Desserts.

By EDITH M. BARBER

AT ALMOST every farmhouse now adays one sees a sign "Fresh Honey for Sale." Honey, probably the first sweetening known to man, is being used to much greater extent recently than it has been for a long time, since farmers have gone into bee raising more intensely.

At a farmhouse where we stopped to buy some comb and liquid honey recently we talked with the woman of the house about the use of honey in cooking and found that she used it for almost any purpose where a sweetening was desired. She gave me a few of her dessert recipes, and to these I have added a few other tested honey recipes:

Honey Raisin Tapioca

- 1 cup tapioca
- 4 cups water
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 1 cup honey
- 1 egg yolk
- ½ pound seeded raisins

Soak tapioca in two cups water for two hours. Add two more cups water; cook until clear and soft. Remove from fire, add other ingredients; cook 15 minutes longer. Serve with a fruit whip or whipped cream. The white of egg may be beaten, mixed with three tablespoons of sugar and used for a meringue.

Banana Honey Mold.

- 2 tablespoons gelatine
- ¾ cup cold water
- 1 lemon
- ¾ cup honey
- 3 ripe bananas (mashed through a sieve)
- 1 cup whipped cream

Soak the gelatine in cold water until soft. Heat the milk and stir in the gelatine. Continue stirring until all gelatine is dissolved. Add the honey, mashed bananas and lemon juice. Set in a cool place. When it begins to thicken fold in the whipped cream. Chill.

Honey Raspberry Sherbet.

- 1 pint fresh raspberries
- 2 lemons
- ¾ cup honey
- 2 cups water
- 1 egg white

Mix the raspberries (which have been put through a sieve), lemon juice, water and honey and let stand several hours to blend. Put into a freezer and when it begins to freeze add beaten egg white. For freezing use eight parts ice to one part salt. For packing use three parts ice and one part salt.

Pineapple Honey Sherbet.

- ¾ cup pineapple juice
- 4 tablespoons lemon juice
- ¾ cup honey
- 1½ cups water
- 1 egg

Mix the juices with the honey. Add the beaten egg yolk and the water. Fold in stiffly beaten egg white. Freeze, using eight parts ice to one

Replacement of Cable Is Engineering Feat

Boulder City, Nev.—One of the unsung exploits in the construction of the gigantic Hoover dam is the replacement of the huge cables stretching across the dam site.

The cables are used to convey men, concrete and other materials in building Uncle Sam's most ambitious water and power project. It is necessary to stop all operations for 48 hours to replace the cables.

Wound on huge spools, the cables, each weighing 55,000 pounds, are placed near the head tower of the cableway and one end is strung to and through the top of the tower.

The new cable is dragged across the canyon and fastened to the old steel rope. After the new cable is secured by supports which also hold the old cable the used steel rope is hauled away.

Each cable is 2,500 feet in length and costs approximately $10,000.

Lights of New York

By L. L. STEVENSON

Talked with a young man whose profession is denoted by a green carnation. He's a gigolo. Makes his living by dancing. Not a bad living at that. His earnings run about $50 a week. Tips are his bread and butter. Has no trouble with New Yorkers. They are accustomed to tipping. But not all New Yorkers are accustomed to tipping gigolos. So they don't know how much to pay. That often results to the advantage of the gigolo. Being in doubt, the New Yorker tips twice as much as he thinks is right. Out of towners are different. They are really bashful about tipping a good looking, well-dressed, polite, light-footed young man. They offer to buy drinks instead. Gigolos don't drink. It interferes with business. So they turn down even champagne. That makes it tough. And they don't get the tip. That makes it more tough. On the other hand, many out of towners fold up a bill and hand it to the gigolo in the form of a handshake.

Gigolos are investigated carefully before they are employed. Their records have to be clean. Also they have to have personality, tact, poise and intelligence—all this of course being quoted from the conversation with the young man with the green carnation. In addition, they have to have endurance. Not all of the dear sex who like to dance are good at it. In case of trodden toes, the gigolo smiles and apologizes—and hopes that the tip will be large enough to justify his stoicism. Gigolos dance only with ladies when their escorts make the request. The reason is that some escorts forget that gigolos are merely paid dancing men. Many men are timid about making the request. But their wives or the wives they happen to be with are good at making suggestions. So the gigolos keep busy.

It doesn't do anyone any good to ask a gigolo his name. He will give one. But it is merely one he has adopted. He is even less frank about himself. The rules make him just a gigolo, and he's content. Sometimes it takes a lot of finesse to retain information and not give offense. Women are the most persistent questioners. But the gigolo tries merely to impress his number on his partner—if she is a good dancer or if her escort is a good tipper.

Getting back to tips. They run from a half dollar up. The biggest tip my informant ever got was $10. That was for dancing almost all evening with the young wife of an elderly man. He had heard of another gigolo who was paid $25 every night by a husband. The husband likes to dance. But he has foot trouble.

Leaving gigolos and taking up newspaper men. The wife of an assistant city editor continually impressed on her two daughters that they were never to marry newspaper men. The husband arrived home one evening to find his wife all smiles. One of the daughters had been notified that she was to edit the school paper next term. The husband didn't share her enthusiasm. Taking the child aside, he told her that she was to learn to stop grounders and catch flies. "This family doesn't need any more newspaper workers," he continued. "What it needs is a good second baseman." And his wife lit on him for not considering the welfare of his children!

Which reminds me of Chet Shafer, head of the former pipe organ pumpers guild, who after some time among the Seven Million, has returned to Three Rivers, Mich., to write and prepare for the fall sausage season. Finding himself with a surplus of $10.50, he went out and bought one of those old-fashioned nickel-plated fire engines—something he had wanted all his life.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

Calling It "Billingsgate"

ALL over the world, wherever English is spoken, the term "Billingsgate" is accepted to connote foul and abusive language. But it hails from right under London bridge! "Billingsgate" is the name of the great London fish market which is located on that unpleasant street in London which runs parallel to the River Thames and runs from the tower to London bridge. That is a street of various odors, but that of the fish market predominates! And the language used by the market "porters" is said to outclass in potency the odor of the fish. Hence "Billingsgate" is known even in parts where the Union Jack does not wave, primarily as another name for bad language!

TRUE DETECTIVE STORY

by Vance Wynn Public Ledger

The Bed That Was Not Occupied

SOME years ago Lemuel R. Boyce, an officer on the St. Louis police force, was murdered while trying to arrest a burglar.

He was very popular among his associates, and there was an almost universal desire to find the man who had committed the deed and to give him the full penalty of the law.

But the difficulty was to get a clue upon which to hinge their investigations.

It was learned that a number of colored men had been seen in the vicinity of the hotel where the officer was shot, but there was nothing to connect them with the crime.

Chief of Police Smith determined to comb the city in order to locate the known colored criminals.

The job was well done, but it did not bring very practical results. Just about that time the chief learned that one of the men who had been seen loitering in the vicinity of Cardinal street on the night of the murder had been sent to the Missouri reformatory a week later on some minor charge.

He called upon the mother of the suspect and questioned her regarding his movements for the previous month.

She admitted that he was wayward, but was positive that he could not have been the murderer of Policeman Boyce.

She was cross-examined, and as a result of that it was found that Frank White—for that was his name—had not slept at home on the night of March 31.

This was extremely important because that was the night the officer was shot.

In addition to ascertaining this bit of information, the chief of police also came away with a bunch of pawn tickets.

One of them called for a revolver. The officer called on the pawnbroker and obtained the weapon.

It was taken to headquarters, and it was found to be the caliber revolver with which Policeman Boyce had been shot.

The proof of this was discovered by means of the bullet that had been taken from the wound.

Thus armed, the chief of police was in a position to confront the suspected man.

He took the train for Boonville and arrived at the reformatory late at night.

In order to make doubly sure he took the mother of White with him. The superintendent was perfectly willing to have White interviewed, but thought it might be postponed until the next morning. Chief Smith did not agree with him.

On the contrary, he said there were several reasons why the meeting should take place that night.

One of them was that the suspect would be confronted unexpectedly and without opportunity of manufacturing an alibi.

He was roused from a solid slumber and brought into the waiting room.

By previous arrangement, the mother had been placed in an adjoining room.

White was surprised when confronted by the detective—but he was also defiant.

He positively denied all knowledge of the Boyce murder and said that he was sleepy and wanted to go back to bed.

"Where did you spend the night of March 31?" asked Chief Smith suddenly.

"At home in my bed—just where I should have spent it."

"But you did not sleep at home that night," replied the detective in his most positive manner.

"How do you know that?" he asked, half tauntingly.

For reply his inquisitor opened a little window in the room and pointed to an adjoining apartment, where sat the mother of the accused man.

Her unexpected presence shook his nerve.

What had she said to the police? How much of the truth had she revealed?

He was troubled and in the end admitted that his bed had not been occupied that night.

A minute later, when confronted by the revolver which had been retrieved from the pawnshop, he broke down and confessed that he had killed Officer Boyce.

Deaf-Mutes' Language

Deaf-mutes seldom use the deaf-and-dumb alphabet, except when communicating names and dates that must be spelled, writes J. F. Regan, Lawrence, Mass., in Collier's Weekly. They employ an indicative sign or symbol language which is faster than speech and generally understood in many countries, hence mutes of different nationalities can sometimes converse without any knowledge of each other's written language.

Eastern Expert Sees Need Of Lower Take

By J. W. MARCHBANK

That versatile and highly capable writer, Vernon Sanders, sounds a timely warning on the dangers of an excessive mutual commission in an article in The Thoroughbred Record. After commenting on the diminution in interest in racing in Kentucky, Illinois, Ohio and Michigan, as indicated by the handle, he calls attention to the preponderantly heavy play at Rockingham Park, New Hampshire, and at Narragansett Park, Rhode Island. In explanation he offers the following:

"New Hampshire and Rhode Island are new territory and the players in these centers of congested population have never felt the sting of the 12 per cent drop in the pools to the extent that others have in various sections of the country, where racing is no new pastime."

The game cannot prosper with a twelve per cent "take." And the tracks must make money in order to keep breeding and racing on the up-grade. It is my notion that here in California, for example, the commission on the pools should be reduced from twelve to nine per cent, with the nine divided in an equitable manner between racing association and the state. In Rhode Island the total is now ten per cent, with the state receiving three and a half per cent, which is too high, just as the four per cent going to the state in this commonwealth is too steep.

Vernon Sanders has another idea that should strike a responsive chord in the breast of every real sportsman. He favors "short, snappy little sessions of the sport," rather than long drawn out affairs simply for money making purposes. That has been my position in all the years I have been trying to establish racing on the firmest of foundations in California. Let's have sport, and not a racket.

We glean this truism from the Christian Science Monitor: "The golden rule of speech is to say to others what you would like others to say to you. It goes further than that. It requires us to say to others what we would have others say of us."

SOME QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Some Little Known Matters That Should Prove of General Interest

(By Maude Larue Ives)

Question: Why do ants rank high in the insect world?

Answer: Next to man, ants are the most adaptable form of animal life in the world. Like man, they have found their way everywhere. No region is too hot or too cold, too dry or too moist to meet their demands. Originally flesh eaters, many species have so far adapted themselves to conditions that they can live and thrive on plant food; and just because of this adaptability they can maintain large colonies. They can endure astonishingly wide temperature changes without apparent suffering, merely digging themselves deeper into the ground when extremes of heat or cold are to be guarded against. They can even survive drought or flood unless too long continued, and even food scarcity; in fact, the female ant can store up enough food in her body to last the greater part of a year. Ants establish more lasting communities, too, than do any of the lower animal forms. Bees are short-lived, the workers living only about three weeks, while worker ants live from four to seven years.

Question: What people enjoy the grasshopper as an article of diet?

Answer: The insects are candied in China, and are an important part of the Filipino diet. In the desert parts of Arabia and in the North African plains near the Red Sea the bodies are dried, ground into powder and mixed with flour for bread. The Indians in the Great Plains region of North America regarded roasted grasshoppers as a great delicacy.

Question: What is known as the "Pearl of the Rockies"?

Answer: This appellation is linked with Lake Louise, because, lying at an altitude of 5645 feet, in the romantic "Lakes in the Clouds" region, in Rocky Mountains Park in Canada, it mirrors in its changeable blue waters all the elusive colors of sky and clouds, dark forests and cliffs and towering glacier-robed mountains. "A jewel dropped from heaven," is the way one writer describes it.

Question: Why is Colorado called the Centennial State?

Answer: Because it was admitted to the Union in 1876, the year of the Centennial Exposition, commemorating the hundredth anniversary of American independence.

Question: Where did the cucumber originate?

Answer: In northern India, at least three thousand years ago.

Question: Where did corn originate?

Answer: The first known cultivation of corn was by the American Indians in their primitive state.

Manifold Leaks

Exhaust manifold gaskets that are constantly leaking exhaust gases, detected by a hissing sound, can best be remedied by having the manifold trued up at a machine shop, according to the emergency road service of the California Automobile Association. The manifold metal may become warped from changes in temperature and when this occurs there is uneven contact between it and the motor block.

Under such conditions it is likely that the gasket will blow out at one of the high spots.

In spite of our depleted forests there is never any shortage of timber for new federal bureaus.

CITES DANGER IN OUTDRIVING RANGE YOUR HEADLIGHTS

Many motorists imperil themselves and others by "outdriving" the range of their headlights and, with inadequate lighting equipment, the rate of speed may be otherwise reasonable and within the law, yet dangerous. This is pointed out in a statement by the public safety committee of the California State Automobile Association, commenting upon the increase in night driving accidents and the part played by the relation between speed and lighting efficiency as a safety factor.

"Motorists are doing an immense amount of night driving at open highway speeds, but accident records indicate that many of them are doing so with twenty-miles-per-hour headlights," Towne chairman said. "Night accidents are increasing and, in addition, a larger proportion of such accidents are resulting in fatalities. The motorist who drives at a speed beyond that which will permit him to stop his car within the range of his headlights is inviting disaster. There is always the possibility that another car, perhaps without a tail light, will loom out of the darkness too near to avoid a collision."

"Fortunately for the outlook, a joint committee of the Illuminating Engineering Society and the Society of Automotive Engineers has approved headlighting standards that mark a real advance and their universal application should improve the safety of night driving. But safe driving at night will always require a proper regard for the relation between speed and the range of one's lights."

The glaring headlight also has long been recognized as a night driving hazard, Towne pointed out. Efforts are being made to impress motorists with the importance of having their lights properly adjusted, and to "dip" their lights as a courtesy to approaching motorists. It has been found that many accidents are due to drivers having become temporarily blinded by glaring lights. This hazard could be practically eliminated, it is declared, if "dipping" lights became a general practice on the open road.

SUGGESTS FORMING SPORTSMEN'S CLUB

The need of an organization in Daly City to promote wild life protection and law enforcement is at hand, in the opinion of Arthur J. Bodien, who believes such an organization should be formed here at once.

He believes that inasmuch as San Mateo county is a hunters and fishermen's paradise, an organized effort should be made to protect its wild life and unite those who seek the pleasures of the great outdoors.

It has been suggested by many that a Sportsmen's Club in Daly City would be the answer and would make those interested in sports better acquainted with each other.

Many things could be accomplished by the formation of such a club, among them being fly and surf casting contests, skeet shoots, fishing excursions and many other amusing things that would be of interest to our local sportsmen.

Mr. Bodien states his only interest in bringing this matter forward is to call together for the first meeting many who have spoken about such a club and also to invite all interested to join in its formation.

Until some other suitable place of meeting can be arranged, Mr. Bodien has called the first meeting to be held at the City Hall, Daly City, on this Friday, September 14, at 8 p. m. sharp.

It is announced that several good speakers have accepted invitations to be present at the meeting tonight.

POPULARITY CONTEST ON FOR KERMESSE QUEEN

The popularity contest to determine who will reign as Queen of the Kermess is drawing candidates for the honor from all sections of the county.

The Kermess is sponsored by San Mateo Pyramid No. 25, Ancient Egyptian Order of Sciois, for the benefit of its hospital fund. The Sciois organization does an enormous amount of welfare work secretly. The hospital fund is one phase of its activities, and is for the use of underprivileged children of any race, color or creed, the individual case and its need being the only determining factors.

Latest to announce their candidacy are Nell Cathey, Burlingame; Aileen McClure, San Bruno, and Gertrude Smith, Daly City. Candidates previously entered are Gilda Brocanelli, San Mateo; Alice Dittman, Burlingame and Alice Swift, Redwood City.

Sponsors for each candidate are working hard to put their choice in first place.

The Kermess itself, which will be held September 28, 29 and 30, at Primrose road and Howard avenue, Burlingame, will be an affair the like of which has not been seen in the county for years. Beautiful and unique decorations, gorgeous costumes, entertainment galore and booths of every description will be provided for the amusement and entertainment of the thousands of visitors expected from the bay region. The queen and her ladies of the court will reign in royal splendor.

PROFIT IS SHOWN AS FAIR COMES TO CLOSE

For the first time in history, the California State Fair was on a profitable basis following the close of the 1934 session, which say all attendance records broken.

Approximately 456,700 persons attended the fair, as compared with the best previous total of 431,012, made in 1929.

As a result of this the board of directors have started plans for the 1935 show already and voted unanimously to construct a $475,000 horse show arena. Attempts will be made to obtain federal aid for this project.

Directors were confident income was more than sufficient to defray all expenses. The fair lost $32,000 in 1933 and $175,000 the year previous.

RELIEF WORK OF COUNTY LESSENS

San Mateo county emergency relief cases have dropped 606, according to a report this week of Captain McAloney, director of the county relief administration.

Of this number, 174 have secured employment, 120 are receiving sufficient income from other sources and 238 failed to report for work after receiving notice from the central bureau.

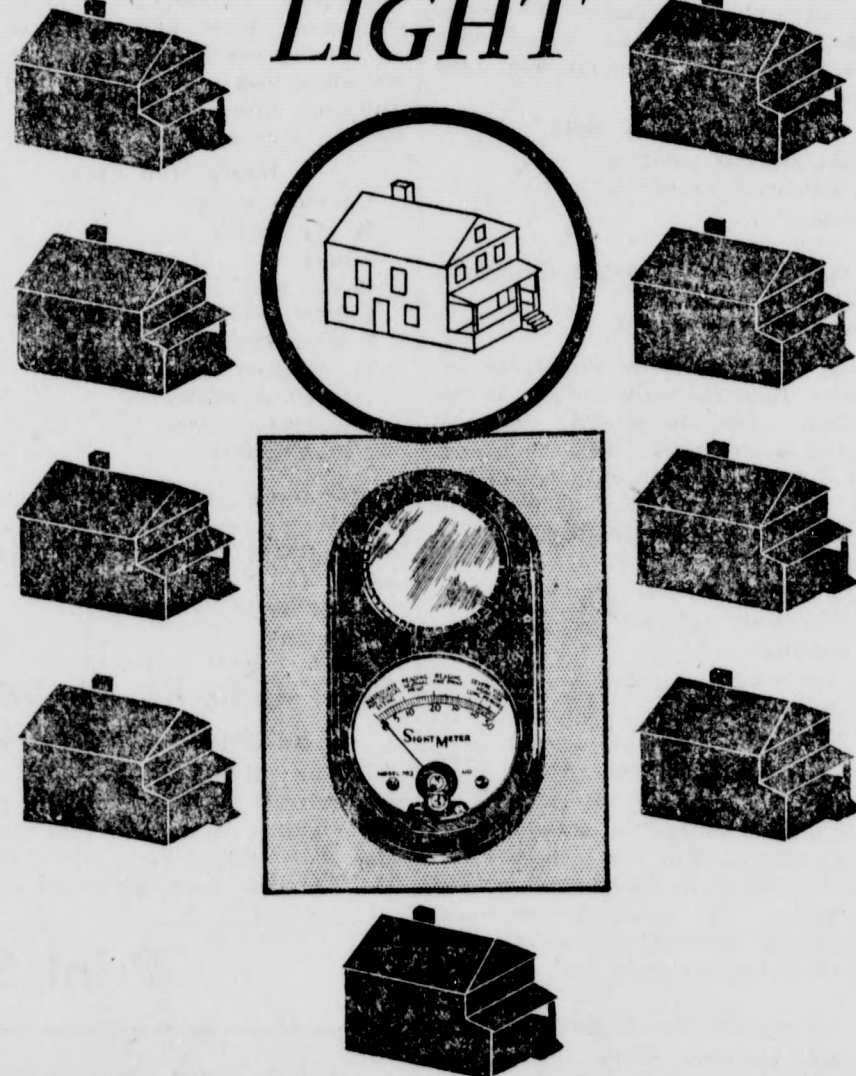

A total of 62 have been referred to the social welfare division of the county, on the assertion that the emergency relief administration is charged only with the care of employable persons in the county, whereas the welfare division is responsible for those physically unable to work, as well as widows and small children and those 70 years or more of age. It is asserted these persons should be advised to apply for state aid.

HAS ADEQUATE
LIGHT

AFTER sundown only one home in ten has light sufficient to help vision instead of hurting the eyes. That is a strong statement but it is true.

Would you like to know for sure if your home is properly lighted at night? This is what you should do about it:

1. Have a Sight Meter test made of the lighting in your home. 2. Have enough light in enough places—25 to 100 footcandles. 3. Have diffused light without glare. 4. Ask your local dealer to help you or call on this company.

Remember this, the difference in cost between good light and poor light is very small. Good lighting pays for itself when it saves eyesight and preserves health.

REPRODUCTION OF THE BLUE EAGLE

A conspicuous display of the Blue Eagle is an important matter in the nation's progress towards recovery.

Not only is this insignia the emblem of NRA codes, but it is a constant reminder of the great co-operative movement that has brought the nation far along the road to better times.

It should also be a reminder that continued co-operation is essential.

When prominently displayed, the Blue Eagle imparts to all a feeling of mutual interest and helpfulness.

As new plans of NRA may be developed and placed in effect, each business man will find that an impressive display of the Blue Eagle will be highly advantageous to himself, and, at the same time, he will thus render a definite contribution in a common effort.

No trade mark, no label, no sign or other mark on merchandise has ever been so widely advertised. It has extraordinary value when intelligently used.

Reproduction of the emblem is very important. Therefore, the head of each establishment should be reminded that he may effect reproduction to whatever extent he sees fit, provided he is entitled to the use of the Code Eagle of his trade or industry.

Reproduction may be made in various ways. He may include the Blue Eagle in his advertising; he may have it printed on packages and merchandise, or he may secure posters or window cards made for display, all according to regulations furnished by the Insignia Section of NRA.

In order to encourage and assist, so far as possible, in the reproduction of insignia, the NRA proposes to furnish to those business establishments desiring the same mats of the Blue Eagle for advertising, and to each a beautiful poster for window display.

Information concerning this service may be secured from local NRA committees or from NRA headquarters at Washington.

BLUE EAGLE CO-OPERATION

Organization is one of the greatest offerings of NRA to date. This organization has sprung from the energy of millions, from the united activity symbolized by the Blue Eagle.

SOME ANCIENT HAPPENINGS OF CITY REVIEWED

Incidents of Pioneer Days and Characters Recalled For Our Readers

(By An Old-Timer)

Only a comparatively few of the readers of these reminiscences are personally familiar with the characters who blazed the trail in dear old Colma for our present thrifty municipality. Many of the old timers have passed beyond, but there remain the fondest memories in the minds of those who are left of those historical figures, many of whom were sports with hearts as big as a mountain—who never held back substantial assistance to relieve the unfortunate. Many a twenty dollar gold piece found its way to cheer someone "down on his luck," with never a thought of its return.

There was no distressing poverty here twenty-five years ago, because of understanding hearts that were ever alert to lend a helping hand. Such were they—honest and cheerful actors in the drama of the times, to whose memory everybody can lift their hats or shed a tender tear of gratitude for their good deeds—the good seeds that were planted in a receptive soil that will everlastingly continue to bear profitable fruit.

Of course, all was not sunshine and roses, but the hardy pioneers took the bitter with the sweet. Last week we mentioned the cleanliness of Matt Callan's hog ranch, with electric lights enumerated along the line of cleanliness.

To the average and unfamiliar mind, electric lights might seem just the thing, and it was just the thing to point out the cleanest paths to traverse. We, who lived here where there were many hog ranches in the "North End," were used to them and it can be said truthfully that there never was a disease attributed to them. Yet, hog ranches were said to be a nuisance, and our district attorney made a vigorous war on them, all because some fastidious people of the Hillsborough, San Mateo and "Blingum" (Burlingame) districts would occasionally get a whiff of an obnoxious smell as they chanced to drive by with their prize teams with silver plated harness. The influence of these nasty nice creatures, with more money than brains, caused many fines to be imposed on the honest industries. In relating the trials and tribulations of the hog ranchers because of the smells, it is timely to mention Upton Sinclair's book, "The

It is projecting "Business America" into new realms of stability.

Since the march of trade and industry to Washington, more than 2500 public hearings have been held on basic codes of fair competition. Some codes required numerous hearings, virtually all of which were held in the nation's capital and were attended by thousands of business leaders from all parts of the country.

Approved basic codes number 498 (through August 7). Another 206 basic codes await approval or consideration at hearings—all in all, 704 basic codes are approved or are being formulated.

Approved codes supplemental to the major group of basic codes total 143 (August 8). Hearings are finished on 91 others. Fifty more have been submitted for hearings—all together, 284 supplemental codes of this type are either approved or being formulated.

National approved basic code authorities number more than 378 (July 28). They comprise, on an average, between five and eleven members each. The smallest has two members; the largest more than 50. Their total membership runs into thousands.

Established supplemental code authorities under the major group of supplemental codes number 48.

The National Retail Code Authority, alone, has functioning under it 781 local code authorities. Their activities touch more than 85 per cent of all stores and more than 90 per cent of all employees falling under the thirteen trade sections covered by the National Retail Code. The local authorities are established in all cities of 25,000 or more population, excepting six, and in all cities over 100,000.

The foregoing facts and figures pyramid into one of the greatest organizational feats in history. They mark only the beginning of NRA's work of boiling down the number of codes and simplifying them. But at the moment, they picture self-organized American trade and industry from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Canada to the Gulf, and in the territories, actively co-operating under the nation's symbol of united action—the Blue Eagle.

The facts bear out the recent words of General Johnson: "The task is well begun."

Jungle," which is a true pen picture of the Chicago stock yards and packing houses. All such packing house hells are the same.

Monday, July 5, 1909, was Colma's first great celebration, and it can be said truthfully that no other Fourth of July celebration here has ever equaled it.

That grand old pioneer, R. S. Thornton, was president of the day; Z. T. Montgomery, grand marshal, and Miss Charlotte Biggio, the Goddess of Liberty, she having won the honor by an overwhelming vote. Her float that headed the long parade was marvelously beautiful. Following this float came the Colma Cornet Band and the pupils of Jefferson School, with Professor W. J. Savage, marshal of the division, including the Eagles' and Forester floats and invited guests from South City, San Mateo and Redwood City.

Colonel Peter Lind of San Bruno was marshal of the second division, with Rough Riders of South City and San Bruno and the San Bruno fire laddies with float.

Charles M. Sharp, marshal of the third division. The Vista Grande fire department, acting as escort to president R. S. Thornton, and Supervisor J. T. Casey, with many decorated carriages with the orators of the day: Henry Ward Brown, Colma; W. J. Martin, Judge A. McSweeney, Joseph H. Nash, Judge E. E. Cunningham, Harry E. Styles and Clarence Hayward.

Then followed many floats of improvement clubs, business houses, G. A. R. and Spanish War Veterans, and hundreds of enthusiastic people of San Francisco, Colma, San Bruno, South City, Easton, Burlingame, San Mateo and Redwood City. George E. Dunn, editor of the Montara Coast Side Comet, had a float decorated with abalone shells.

The line of the parade was from Biggio Park on San Pedro avenue, north via Mission Road to Sickles avenue, and every foot on either side seemed to be a seething mass of enthusiastic humanity.

After the speeches at Biggio Park there was a great barbecue at which at least 5000 people were freely fed. At night the fireworks display was an amazing sight. The point selected was on Wellington avenue about five blocks east of Mission Road.

Then, to cap the climax, there was a grand ball that lasted until daylight, at the Biggio Park pavilion.

During all the gala day there was not an accident of any kind and the unanimous opinion was that nothing could have been added to make Colma's Fourth of July celebration a more perfect success.

Whisky, wine and beer there was in abundance, but the drinkers were having too good a time to get drunk, and thus this glorious chapter ends.

SERA STARTS TO DISTRIBUTE BEEF

Distribution by the SERA to its work relief personnel of the weekly state wide ration of 500,000 pounds of tender cuts of meat from cattle shipped in from the drought stricken areas will begin this week, according to the director of surplus commodities for the SERA.

Workers on SERA projects will be given orders for this meat with their pay checks.

The distribution of fresh meat will mark a new departure in the government's huge surplus commodities program. The cattle buying and slaughtering operations of the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation have assumed such proportions that the meat canning facilities in California—where the bulk of the western drought cattle is being processed—are overtaxed.

The fresh meat is being distributed to the unemployed through the various county relief agencies of the SERA and only the very best cuts will be used for this purpose.

Use Uniform Tires

Tires used on the front wheels should be of the same make and tread and have the same number of plies, according to the emergency road service of the California Automobile Association.

If the weight or tread varies to any extent between the two front tires, steering trouble, shimmying and other difficulties may be experienced.

Grease After Washing

A thorough washing of the car and chassis should always be followed by a thorough greasing, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association. Grease will force water out of moving parts, whereas if the water is allowed to remain rust and squeaks will result.

Carburetor "Pop"

Sputtering or "popping back" through the carburetor can usually be traced to old spark plugs, lean mixture or excessive carbon, according to the emergency road service of the California Automobile Association.

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a faculty position in Lostland Academy, Janet Mercer meets Prof. Arthur Fleming, also on his way to the Academy. At the school they are struck by an air of mystery pervading the place. Gordon Haskell, proprietor, welcomes them. Wilton Payne completes the Academy faculty. In a schoolroom Janet finds a group which the teachers had supposed were scholars, are wax figures. Haskell explains unusual circumstances connected with the conduct of the Academy. Among the pupils is Berenice Bracebridge, daughter of the late owner of the school. The story of the tragedy of Lostland Academy is that of two sisters and two brothers of Berenice, who lost their lives in the water, at the same moment, some years ago. The wax figures were modeled in the likenesses of the four children, and Doctor Bracebridge's will provided that they must be preserved. Payne learns from Berenice that the uncouth giant whom Janet had seen with Haskell is named Balder, and is a valuable servant. From an old farmer, Jerry Moore, the only witness of the drowning of the children, Payne learns particulars of the tragedy. He begins to take an increasing interest in Berenice, as Fleming does in Janet.

"Not tonight. Don't forget to put out the lamps when you go to bed."
"I'll see to it," Janet said.
"You won't come in, sir?" Payne asked. He had noticed Haskell's reluctance on other occasions to linger in that library.

"No, I have work to do—in my room."

Berenice looked after him with a speculative, half maternal air. "I hope when I'm off his hands he'll enjoy life a little."

"Must everything go on like this until you are twenty-one?"

"Or until I marry—if I marry before I am twenty-one. Then the guardianship—trusteeship—passes to my husband until I am twenty-one—then to me absolutely."

Mrs. Denver laid down her knitting. "My child, why don't you marry?"

A nervous silence followed this remark. Payne put his hand over his eyes as if to shade them from the light, and Arthur and Janet looked like people at a play just after the curtain has gone up. Mrs. Denver resumed her knitting. Berenice stirred the fire—and great tongues of flame sought the black case of the chimney.

Then, feeling strangely juvenile together and as if skirting the dark wood of fate, they drew around the fire telling stories.

Then Payne said, "Someone must be delegated to get fudge."

"I'll go," said Berenice, rising.

"I'll go with you."

"No, please."

Payne waited; gave her a little start, then followed her. At the foot of the staircase she turned, not toward the kitchen, but toward the room where the figures were kept.

"Berenice," his voice had a stern yet tender quality. She started violently, looked back. "Oh, why did you come?"

"Because I thought you might do this. You watched the door too much."

"I was getting afraid again—I suppose the anniversary and Mother Martha's tolling the bell depressed me—I wanted to see their dear faces—be kept from thinking they could ever harm me. It's a foolish fancy—but it came, and I thought I would look in there first before I got the fudge."

He walked with her down the passage. "Will you take one of the lamps from the brackets?"

He lifted it down. She turned the handle. "Why, it's locked, and there's a new lock! Oh, he must give me the key; he must!"

"Don't you think it's just as well to have this room locked? The figures are safe from prying eyes and meddling hands—and I am sure your guardian will give you a key."

"He may not. He is very firm at times."

"Maybe he thinks it's better for your health and spirits not to go there too much."

"Perhaps he is right—and after all—now you will think me foolish again, there was something else beside fear. I suppose I've been like a little girl with her dolls who doesn't want them to be lonely or unhappy, even though she knows they are not alive."

Later in the evening she showed him some old diaries kept by her father. "I've often thought they ought to be published; he put down so many comments on current events, as well as the academy news. Would you look over them for me some time—and tell me what you think could be done with them?"

He promised her to look through them. The four had played cards, eaten fudge, chatted, with Mrs. Denver plied knitting in the background. They thought her quite adorable in her faculty of being with them without any of the middle-aged stria-

tures on their impulses of the moment. They had a common unspoken feeling, of being in a play. The wind sweeping wildly from the mountains rattled the heavy window frames and swayed the maroon rep curtains softly. They had a sense of empty rooms and hidden projects about them. Berenice forgot even that she had ever felt fear in the place—though the ever-present mystery was still sharply with

CHAPTER V

When every one but himself had gone to bed, Payne sat down to read the diaries of the late Dr. Jethro Bracebridge, but he had no intention of going back to the earlier years first, on the track, as he was, of the situation in Lostland academy just before the deaths of the four Bracebridge children. It was easily traced, as the diaries ended abruptly on the twenty-ninth of September of the year of the drowning. On that fatal day, Doctor Bracebridge had ceased his records, never to open them again.

He evidently had been a man of deep scholarship, and of what is sometimes missing in conjunction with scholarship—broad and deep sympathies. In one place he had written:

"The thinker is sometimes more likely to go astray in his conclusions than the warm-hearted man of action. Education should never be carried beyond the point where it stultifies spontaneous and generous deeds. Life was meant to be loved out; not thought out."

Payne turned back to the approximate date of Doctor Bracebridge's second marriage, and found this entry:

"Mrs. Haskell is a dear woman—most lovable. I would not be surprised if after our marriage, Berenice did grow to love her as her own mother. The child is only four."

The first mention of Gordon Haskell rather surprised Wilton:

"Well, he arrived at five to take up his new duties; and I must confess

"Oh! He Must Give Me the Key; He Must!"

I am disappointed in him, though whether this first feeling will wear off, and a heartier one take its place, remains to be seen."

Two weeks later:

"Jethro announced to me that he disliked Gordon Haskell, and did not intend to be his student. I remonstrated with him, but the lad, with all his fine qualities, is at times hot-headed and obstinate. Althea, Norman and Isabel show this aversion to Gordon; apparently only little Berenice likes the poor fellow. She allowed him to take her on his knee yesterday and hear her say her letters. Poor baby! Education at present interests her but slightly."

Six months later:

"I intend to appoint Gordon co-guardian with Mrs. Bracebridge, in case of my death, over the five children. I shall, of course, provide for him, too; though not in the measure I do for the others. I am sorry the youngsters hate him so, for it leads to a series of minor outbreaks between them. Privately I think Gordon a rather savage teacher; some men are like that—too impatient of a pupil's limitations! I have asked him to be more gentle and more nonchalant with his scholars. Children as a rule respect and like people who are rather casual toward them. The intense adult is their abhorrence. Perhaps they know better than we do that a rage for reshaping life is not according to the sweet reasonableness of the divine policy. Gordon is ambitious! I doubt greatly if he cares to bury himself long at Lostland academy; so the children and their arch-foe may be separated naturally."

In the last year, Gordon Haskell's name appeared very seldom. Doctor Bracebridge evidently had other things to worry him—an epidemic of measles in the school, and a series of thefts, particularly one large sum from the locked drawer of a desk in the library. In another place was written:

"I am afraid it is Balder; a sullen, disagreeable fellow, but as he does twice the work, when he chooses, of an ordinary man, it doesn't seem right to dismiss him merely from prejudice or the suspicion of something we can't prove. I've given up trying to reconcile my incomparable four and Gordon. That, too, is a temperamental matter, and with such chemistry, one does well not to meddle."

"Poor man. It would have been better if you had meddled," Wilton reflected. "Those boys and girls probably diagnosed Haskell's character better than you did."

TO BE CONTINUED.

Solving School Clothes Problems

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

WHAT to wear "first day of school" and the day after the day after and for months to come in the class room—an ever important problem which the month of September never fails to present as it sings the swan-song of happy vacation time.

To doting mothers and others whose responsibility it is to see that the children of the household go suitably and modestly appareled to school, the message in regard to juvenile fashions according to early fall showings is sure to prove nothing less than inspirational. That designers are giving so much of their best efforts to create attractive, at the same time practical styles for little folks ought to be a very encouraging sign for future costuming.

The trio of cunning models pictured tell a fascinating story of early fall juvenile style trends. These charming fashions were selected for illustration from among a host of equally as attractive outfits for youngsters as displayed in recent style shows held by the Chicago Wholesale Market council. The young miss standing to the left in the picture shows how really style-wise a little girl of this day and generation can be in that she is wearing a frock of green wool crepe, and green as the color card tells us is a leader this season, especially dark mossy greens. Then, too, interest in crepe weaves is very apparent in the fabric realm. Being jumper style this dress is ideal for school wear, for the little maiden can enjoy a fresh blouse each day if she so chooses.

Again brother and sister outfits are proving of tremendous appeal and in this connection it is interesting to note

SMARTLY SIMPLE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

This frock of navy and white cord-dot print in a chulla crepe weave is a good example of the new vogue which is being so enthusiastically acclaimed for simplicity in one's daytime apparel. It is just such a type as the well-dressed school girl will wear, as it will be equally at home in the classroom or at an informal dormitory tea, just as good form in the office, for that matter. Note that it is styled without pleated or ruffled elaboration, fancy lingerie touches or any other detail that would be difficult to handle in laundering, for as most women have found out for their joy and satisfaction these all-rayon crepes wash perfectly.

Rings Over Gloves

that the two-sister theme is also being advanced, in which costumes showing duplication of color and pattern are sized to fit little girls of different ages. In the instance of the brother and sister outfits pictured, plaid in a gay new cotton weave will go off to school in a manner to delight every eye that beholds this adorable two-some. The contrast of plain with print is effectively emphasized.

Speaking generally of style items stressed at these recent previews of children's fashions one is impressed with the radical color departure in little folks' costumes. Instead of the dainty childish colors usually associated with the juvenile world, little girls are now adopting the greens, browns and reds of their older sisters with of course a continued use of dark blue.

Also it is noted that plaids identify an increasing number of frocks this fall, taking from the formerly favored floral prints considerable of their glory. One clever frock in the style parade looks like a genuine Scotch costume with its red plaid pleated skirt and navy bolero over a white blouse. Frocks of unusual interest also feature the use of three and even four colors.

As to important fabrics it is significant that woollens are proving a strong factor. Wool crepes and novelities lead, while even the cottons take on a wool-like texture.

HAT TRENDS FOLLOW THREE DIRECTIONS

Three trends are the outstanding hat news. The first is the rule "over the face" for virtually every hat pitches forward over the right eyebrow and curls up in the back. The second is double brims with one piece of felt swooping down from the crown, turning under and looping back into the head band. The third is the use of such 1910 fabrics as panne velvet, beaver, soft drape felts and feathers.

Feathers are everywhere. Black birds of paradise swoop forward from under the wide curved-up brim of a black panne velvet. A white bird, wings outspread, hangs head down from the back of a black felt. Five little rose birds lie flattened on the crown of another black felt.

Muffs Assume New Shapes for Fall and New Furs

Muffs for fall are assuming new shapes and new furs. There's just enough room in them for your two hands, and after all, that's all the room a muff needs, when you consider the situation impartially. These are shown in sleek, flat furs, for wear with furless coats and suits, and they're the last whisper from the last boat from Paris.

Practically the same effect is gained by the new muff gloves shown in recent displays of advance winter styles.

These are of Angora knit, with a long cuff which may be pulled down over each hand. Place the hands together in the approved fashion for muff-holding, and lo!—you have a muff.

Satin Blouses

Satin in peculiarly becoming off-shades made with drapery necklines and full elbow sleeves is first choice in the thorough line-up of luxurious blouses which the shops are showing for fall.

Plaid Crepes

Mossy crepes in plaid patterns will be shown in jacket suits, scarfs and blouses for early fall.

THE GREAT H. I.

By R. H. WILKINSON

© Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.

THEY called him the Great H. I. His full name was Henry Isadore Darrell. But, he disliked "Henry," and so let it become "H. I." known he was to be addressed as "H. I."

The more intimate of his associates called him "Hi," which was to the great man's liking.

He had risen from the ranks. He was a typical self-made man.

At forty he was head of a great textile plant, a plant in which, 25 years before, he had served as bobbin boy.

When the depression hit New England the Darrell mill did not discontinue operations.

It kept going, employing a full capacity of laborers.

True, in order to meet competition, it slashed prices, lessened the quality of its product. And to offset this reduction in its income, it cut wages. Cut them to the bone. But it kept going. Full time. Night and day. Employing a full roster of men and women.

It was all due, they said, to the ingenuity of H. I.

It was his brains that kept the men at work.

Other mills in other towns nearby went on half time, quarter time, closed down entirely. But H. I.'s great plant in Martinsville continued to operate.

H. I. was very proud.

He received the plaudits of the people of Martinsville with an appreciative little smile.

He understood how they felt.

He could place himself in their position. For wasn't once he, the Great H. I., a bobbin boy in the mill which he now controlled?

H. I. worked night and day, negotiating, dickering, quoting prices. And the orders continued to roll in.

The looms were never idle.

Fortunately, H. I. had the foresight to surround himself with brilliant men.

During his climb up the ladder he had had the ingenuity to benefit by his association with others. And when he reached the top he didn't forget.

He studied the records of the men who had been employed at the plant for years on end. And he craftily appointed these men to the positions to which they were most fitted. And when all the appointments were completed, H. I. looked over his little army of executives and was satisfied.

And he, the Great H. I., was the head of one of the most powerful industrial organizations in the country.

H. I., like most folks, had anticipated an early recovery from the depression.

He was, in fact, quite astounded when, in 1932, the good old United States was wallowing quite helplessly and quite a good deal deeper in the muck of inertia. But H. I. didn't waste any time fretting or complaining.

Instead he worked even harder.

Frequently he took business trips to New York; more frequently he staved up half the night bending over sheaves of figures—quotations, prices, discounts and what not.

And it wasn't long before those closely associated with the great man and members of his immediate family began to perceive a change in the textile king.

The strain of overwork and too-late hours was beginning to tell.

Dark circles appeared under his eyes.

Flesh fell away from his body.

Hollows appeared in his cheeks.

A dullness came to his eyes.

In short, H. I. was beginning to slow up.

He wasn't as quick as he once had been, or as sure.

Maurice Barnstead, H. I.'s chief executive, suggested a rest. H. I. looked at him in mingled anger and puzzlement.

"Rest!" he exploded. "Rest! Me? Don't be an idiot, Maurice! Why, what would happen to the mill if I should go away? What would happen, eh?"

"You can't ruin your health," Maurice protested mildly.

"You can't go on forever. We'd just have to struggle along without you."

"Bah! Who put this mill where it is today, eh? Who besides the great H. I.? Talk sense, Maurice. Should I go away it would be the end. The mill would close. All these good people would be out of work. Then what, eh?"

But Maurice had read the handwriting on the wall.

Within a month's time something snapped inside H. I.'s head.

He seemed dazed, unable to think.

He couldn't concentrate.

His doctor suggested a vacation; finally ordered it. H. I. was enraged, indignant, unmanageable.

"But the mill! What will happen to it, eh? Within a week the looms will no longer run. It will mean the end. They can't get along without me."

Mrs. Darrell and Maurice and the doctor all agreed that he was right. But in his present condition he could do no good. He must go away. He must rest. They were firm.

And so, after a good deal of persuasion, H. I. consented. But even then they had to practically force him into it.

He sputtered and complained and raged during the three days it took to reach Miami.

He continued to sputter and rage during the next week.

But they forced him to play golf, to sail about Biscayne bay in a chartered yacht, to sit for hours in the warm sun on the beach.

He asked for and was refused news of conditions back at the mill.

They tried to keep his mind from business.

They wouldn't even let him talk with other textile magnates who were wintering in Florida.

"The mill is closed, eh? Shut down. Folded up. That is why you will not let me hear the news, eh? You think it does me good? Perhaps now you will believe when I say they cannot keep going without the great H. I., eh?"

They kept him there a month.

Then they let him go back.

It was no use. He had improved but slightly. He was like a maniac, ever thinking and talking about his mill.

The train bearing H. I. and his party reached Boston late in the evening.

The great man scoffed at suggestions to remain overnight in the city.

The sooner he reached Martinsville the better.

He chartered an automobile.

They drove through the night, passed through sleeping towns with mills that were closed and dark; factories looming on every hand like grim spectres of a once flourishing industry.

H. I. squirmed in his seat, became morose.

At length they reached the outskirts of Martinsville, whirled up the main street, came abreast of the mill. H. I. started, blinked, rubbed his eyes.

The mill was lighted!

Every window of every department shone brightly. There was the hum of machinery. An atmosphere of industry prevailed about the place.

H. I. climbed down from the automobile, went alone into the office. Maurice was there; Maurice and the entire night force.

They looked at the great man in surprise.

There was also the merest trace of annoyance in the glance they bestowed upon him.

"The mill is running, eh? Come, what kind of a trick are you playing? You are running and yet there are no orders. There can be no orders without me here to see to things."

Maurice seemed surprised.

Things had been going along all right. Orders? Of course. Why not? The mill was running as it always had run.

H. I. was incredulous.

He sat down, looked through some books, listened to the reports of various department heads, stood up, thrust his hands deep into his pockets, strode over to a window and stared out into the night.

And then suddenly the great realization came. The mill had run without him!

They had managed somehow without his guiding hand!

He wasn't after all, as important as he'd thought himself to be.

He'd had an exalted opinion of himself.

He'd placed a halo about his head, thought he'd held the reins of progress in his hands.

He'd believed that the mill and everyone connected with it depended upon him and him alone.

He'd come to think of himself as a savior, as some kind of exalted being on whom the world was depending for guidance.

Suddenly H. I. chuckled and for the first time in months a twinkle came into his eyes.

He wasn't, he reflected, important at all.

Things had progressed quite as smoothly as they always had. The mill and Martinsville and the whole world did and would continue to go on whether he was around or not.

He was such an insignificant part of it.

There had been others before him: Caesar, Napoleon, Cromwell, Alexander—hundreds upon hundreds of men who thought of themselves as a little more important in the scheme of things than the next man.

They had come and gone and the world had gone on and on with scarcely a ripple in its progress.

H. I. turned away at last and looked at Maurice, but Maurice had turned back to his desk, had in fact, forgotten the great man's presence.

"What a fool," H. I. muttered, "a man is to think that anything depends upon him alone to keep it going."

And the Great H. I. went out and climbed into his automobile and drove away toward home.

And as he rode along he began to think how nice it had been in the warm sunshine of Miami beach where he hadn't amounted to much.

Two Havanas

Havana, Cuba, like Lima, Peru, is sometimes called the Paris of the western world. There are really two Havanas. There is the old city, breathing the spirit of the past in its narrow crooked streets, in its picturesque fortresses and defense works of a former age, in its old cathedral and its grilles and latticed balconies. Then there is the new Havana—a modern city of broad boulevards.

Deep Sea Butter

Golden treasure in the form of some 400,000 pounds of butter was recently raised from the sea between Norway and Denmark. The butter was cargo on the ill-fated vesel Oberon. When liberated, the tubs floated to the surface. Experts tasted the butter and declared that six months in the briny deep had not hurt it.

THOUSANDS ATTEND FORD THEATER AT THE WORLD'S FAIR

Folks the nation over do like their movies and their stage shows. That fact is conclusively demonstrated by figures just reported from the Ford Exposition at the 1934 Century of Progress in Chicago.

Hidden away in an inconspicuous corner of the main Ford Building is a tiny theater, yet some 300,000 men, women, and children from all parts of America and abroad beat a path to its door in the first two months of the World's Fair—an average of approximately 5,000 a day.

Large as that figure looms, it is small compared to the total number of 4,980,000 visiting the Ford Exposition in all its many sections in the first sixty days—a daily average of $3,000.

The theater, seating 300, presents a free forty minute show sixteen times a day, seven days a week.

The program is divided into two parts: a motion picture, "Rhapsody in Steel"; and a stage show, "The Human Ford." There's always a line waiting for the next show.

On the screen is dramatized the making of the 1934 Ford V-8 car, to the accompaniment of modern music, written especially for the picture, simulating symphonically the rhythmic clatter and clash of steel on steel, the shriek of factory whistles, the roar of flames, the cascading of sparks, and the purr of well-oiled, snugly assembled motors.

"Rhapsody in Steel" is so good a modern screen and musical composition that it recently won favorable comment from the music editor of time. Half of the picture portrays the forming of white-hot metal into automobile parts. The other half shows the assembly of the Ford V-8, so arranged that the car builds itself up piece by piece, under the direction of an amusing animated imp.

"The Human Ford" is a Ford V-8 in sparkling finish which talks to the audience, answers questions, and reads serial numbers of watches and dollar bills.

HANDSOME GOB BREAKS INTO HIGH SOCIETY

"You don't know how funny you are! You're not worth the powder to blow you up! Take away your tops and you'd starve to death! Not one of you ever had an honest thought, or made an honest move! You're too smart to be on the level—that stuff's for sailors!"

Strong words, my hearties, but these are only a part of the remarks made by Mike McGann, inebriated sailor, to a group of social lights, who, he finds, have been laughing at him behind his back. A friendly, hearty rough neck by birth and environment, Mike has forced his way into the inner circle of high society, only to discover that he has been the laughing stock of his newly found friends.

They don't have a chance to say, "Let's Talk It Over" with him in this Universal comedy drama now playing at the Daly City Theater, with Chester Morris in the starring role of McGann, Mae Clarke as the heiress who does not know her own heart, and Frank Craven, noted stage star, as the girl's uncle.

This entertaining picture was directed by Kurt Neumann, and other members of Morris' supporting cast are Andy Devine, Irene Ware, John Warburton, Russ Brown, Goodee Montgomery and Anderson Lawler.
